President Thomas Jefferson

Thomas Jefferson, third President of the United States, was an enlightened wine lover, a pioneer of viticulture and a fierce promoter of the development of quality wines in the United States.

As Minister (Ambassador) and envoy to Paris from 1784 to 1789, he travelled the vineyards of France and northern Italy in a horse-drawn carriage on a journey of oenological discovery, but also one which enabled him to research and uncover some of the secrets of Europe's finest vineyards and vintners.

Thomas Jefferson stayed in Bordeaux from May 24th to 28th, 1787; this was the longest sojourn of his journey.

The future President attended two shows at the Grand Théâtre de Bordeaux whose architecture he greatly admired. He also visited a number of vineyards including Château d'Yquem, Château Haut-Brion, Château Pontac Monplaisir and Château Carbonnieux where he was reputed to have planted a tree.
